THE GODDESS OF PAINTINGS

Verónica Mesa Chavarriaga (6°B)

Once upon a time there was an abandoned island in which only a girl lived.

She was the only one that lived there, she had a huge house in the top of the mountain and she had food, books to learn everything she needed, and also paints and brushes to spend the time.

As she was the only one that lived there she was everything and everyone, she was the goddess of that island.

After reading some of her books she discovered what the brushes and paints were for she started painting a jungle in which she drew a man, and then a city in which they were all kinds of people she was kind of jealous because they were not alone, she felt lonely.

The days past and she had hundreds of paintings; she didn't know what to do after she went to sleep and fell into one of her paintings a magical Kingdom she found herself in her painting in which she met a boy. He didn't know how to talk, he looked nice and fun to spend the time and off course they became friends when that day ended and she was exhausted and fell asleep quickly.

When she woke up she was in her mansion again, alone, the goddess of the island.

After eating breakfast she saw the boy in her painting and she thought he was waving when she waved back she knew he was actually not real, and she was alone.

She couldn't stand living alone and decided to end with her loneliness after throwing all her paintings she went to a cliff and fell, she died in some pointy rocks and her body stayed there.

The girl's friend came out of the painting and looked for her everywhere until he went to the cliff and found her dead body. He got her body and started crying, his first tear fell into her chest and she actually woke up he was so happy he started laughing, something he had never done before. The girl read some books about marriage and decided to marry the boy after the two people wedding they had kids and the girl was never alone again.
